

NOON 15

NOON | journal of the short poem

ISSUE 15
August 2019

weightless a moment over the green pond a glint of drone in the sky we'll fold 1000 foil cranes absinthe sky –

the nasturtiums take on an eerie hue

Clayton Beach

cherry blossom flavored
hyper-violence

bud breaks now wider than our words

i momentarily
trade an adverb
for fallen leaves

side 4: a millennium's worth of fallen leaves
aflame

Scott Metz

Phoenix

(Quercus agrifolia)

Black trunk of oak,
singed and seared,
shelved
with a conk
of fungus,

from the ashes
you bring shoots of shine,
tart leaves,
teal wings.

Paul Willis

a tendril grows, turns makes its own
sutra

catch me
if you can, she sings, our age is foul
and devious

dawn's tepid chorus
washes light on tundra;
wedding of sun
and veils

day begins on cursal heights of musak, then trills to dusk

pale mist;
crocus flattering
thought's
acre snakeskins drop,

curl; hardening
to dust
and serifs

Rufo Quintavalle

beads of rain
on the spider's web
a pronoun climbs
into my lexicon

John McManus

winter stillness :: the crash and burn of semicolons

Out in the World

Where do you put your eyes
when you have already seen everything?

Look for the tarnish.
Anything.
Escape to other worlds.

Reduce the inverted afternoon.
A chair is just a cube.
Black is a losing color.

Like water into concrete, a title comes.

Source: A cut-up/remixed poem composed from Flowers in the Attic by V. C. Andrews.

Book Reviews

1.

you can't put this book down – your fingertips stick to the cover like tongues to frozen iron and your eyelids burn away

2.

a book certain to start a religion – a moral tale, so simple, so powerful whoever disagrees with it must die

3.

every sentence is memorable every line is quotable, and every quote is:
the world is a terrible place

Rohingya

sunset at Sittwe:

a slice of red, a cut

inside my navel

bleeding

profusely

inward

Uvula

Heresy,
to worship only superficial beauty.

Beyond your lips,
past the pink porch of your yawn, font, chalice, and grape wait in holy union.

Deep in that unlit nave, the moist paradise of Beulah.

Imagination, depraved abases before no cross, no rose-stained glass,

but your uvula

hanging immaculate:
the Church of the Red Bat.

C.E.J. Simons

from Lampedusa

2/due

we rented a car with no brakes pigged out on orange fireballs & amber beer when we get home
I'll lather your hips with gram flour & turmeric paste

3/thri

a distant scooter saws the night in half grooves cut free from ends of parties
float electrical & pulse looped anchor
 silence
 to infinity
below the cove
is motionless hue
soon
I will sit out in first light and wait for you to wriggle
 slowly
 free from sleep

4/quattru

fish swim in their own shadows
retracing vectors across a shimmering grid of light

from Barcelona

3/tres

long shell oyster fossil olive leather poufs & gilded doorknobs cast in squeezed fists of clay it's nice to be home with you again especially now we don't know where we live anymore

Simon Marsh

o and by the waves who's we all the acorns taken out to sea float back into her hands the raspberries in her stomach the bee @ her ear

new year's eve a beach fire we inherit and abandon

Scott Metz

()

each match contains an unhatched
flame

Bob Heman

these possibilities
make me
ill at ease

§News Cycle

spring is the poet's job interview

§Poetic Economy

Stephan Delbos

first date
he polishes
his avatar

a lifetime of protest votes
day moon

Dave Read

spring morning
cops cite a saxophonist for disturbing the peace above the mall

the rest of the mountain's unrest

Dave Bonta

The sky the kind of blue you can't take seriously.

Mark Terrill

from Subway Poems

10-22-14

What kind of day is it?
It's cold and rainy,
leaves blowing down
from the trees.

It's not a nice day,
not out here on 7th Ave., unless you're in love,
or having brilliant ideas.

It's cold and rainy,
leaves blowing down
from the trees.

3-6-15

On these cloudless days, the sky stretches off in every direction, pulls your eyes in every direction, you feel like you can go as far as you want in every direction.
Is that a good thing?
It sounds like a good thing.

2-12-16

In the train on the opposite platform, I see one of the clichés of American art:
a woman looking out the window with longing.
She has raven black hair with a shock of white in front.
She looks like a skunk.
It has to be intentional.
Is it possible for a skunk to feel longing?
Skunks are unloved, that's for sure.
Perhaps skunks, from time to time, feel a longing – not to be unloved.

3-7-16

Today, on 7th Ave., there is no vanishing point, nothing to yearn for.

Too many delivery trucks double-parked to see any distance at all, much less to the fulfillment of dreams.

Michael Ruby

A Manoeuvre of Words and Wordlessness

When I wake in the middle of the night older than I would like to be I feel a twinge of freedom I look out at the moon surly and aloof and malformed and see beauty embracing the twinge as though it were in full flight.

Isn't that what's exciting about freedom that it can freeze or paralyse you?
And might I add, free or imprison,
a manoeuvre of words and wordlessness
the mind's cunning at the body's expense.

J.J. Steinfeld

Punctuate

A body in motion or at rest must be determined to motion or rest by another body, which other body has been determined to motion or rest by a third body, and that third again by a fourth, and so on to infinity. The dead, who have felt nothing for so long, begin to sway happily on the far shore; memories lap against their feet, spray in fine droplets over their breasts, their beautiful heads. Fire is known to be fire by the heat; fire in the eye, fire in the heart, fire in the loins, all die, and this dying is the heart of the matter. The endeavor, whereby a thing endeavors to persist in its own being, involves no finite time, but an indefinite time.

It from Bit

In thirty minutes there will be silence settling in backstage shadows, in the curtain's high folds, along the floor's dark, waxed-wood sheen. Because of this wormhole connection, he explained,

'Ted and Bob are the same.' So the result is sort of like the happy ending of one of those screwball romantic comedies that involve mistaken identity, and the handsome vagabond turns out to be the prince in disguise: Alice can marry Ted who is really Bob, and the bonds of matrimony extend smoothly across the edge of the black hole. She clears brush from her raspberry patch, re-puttys low windows she can reach.

How many thousand provincial capitals slain America?

Joel Chace

Secret V's

i.m. Ray Tremblay 1950-2004

Mythical places
unattended.

We don't know where we're going

except

walking west.
This street is a mystery-to-me.

I think it's smoke, but it's curtains rippling in the breeze.

I think it's curtains

and the fire truck comes.

Disjoint

my old mother's rheumatic hands that didn't act or look in the end like hands

Her Wryness

Guy Birchard

Occasionally

when I am reading a book and have my hand on the page I notice my hand as if it belonged somewhere else, or to some other being. Knuckles, veins, fingers, skin, color, all peculiar and as if also by an author I'll never meet.

Illustration of Methods of Breaking the Panic-Stricken Grip of a Drowning Person

(for Carolie Parker)

The illustrator imagined those waves around the young bodies going down: swirls, thick lines, empty air. I imagine the unnamed illustrator thinking I should not have taken this job, should not have pictured those in despair, in the water, the cartoon dread, cartoon youth.

alone in a cemetery
the news

John Levy

dead men, nights, in my dreaming, tell me this, or that sad tale, tip the wink, that this won't do, what seems to mean, won't do at all

Ray Malone

cold cell
shoelaceless thoughts the hanged poet's fallen members mulching a fragrance of gabirolian figs

Danny Blackwell

gibbous moon a glimpse of his hereafter forsythia the scent of her subjunctive blue horizon

who will carry my bag of bones

Roberta Beary

starlight through my body of metaphors

crossing the river on horseback the river

Michelle Tennison

each/your own

the rain beats down the hill until the hill's

the Ground

tomorrow/never comes flesh of cloud, voice of traffic the body always within reach

Sabine Miller

Water Disco

It blinds – the asphalt nightclub's thrum and vapor. A backward glance, I-29 all steam and water stippled down a windshield.

Outside, oak leaves decompose. There's too much noise,
light drawls I can't unhinge. In dark, cicadas cease, from parchment shelters, trilling from a kudzu wall.
Rain rings the car roof, falls in beaded curtains through the back door of my vision.

Streets, glossed and igneous, spilling buttons.

Valerie Duff

Sign above
a urinal:
Water will flow
when no one is here.

Warren Decker

death poem . . .
all my attempts
stillborn

snow
be it

Christopher Patchel

zen gardener
the gap in his smile
in his rake

Peter Newton

from tool box

the grackle
foot-long wood-rasp

the plan sketched out beyond me

trowel
I revert to bare hands

handsaw

taped grip taken knee holds down board

teeth to pencil-

scored edge thumb-joint

breath drawn soft pine

John Martone

where the dove tamer hangs his traps summer cloud through Homer's blind eyes sunspots from Mars

Réka Nyitrai

blood moon
the suddenness
of the gun

Ben Moeller-Gaa

probe snaps my world a distant period

Helen Buckingham

from Solitary Confinement

Day 23 Give me a breath-holding lesson give me hunger. Tear out book pages, bite my fingertips, swallow the air. Make me stronger than granite, louder than church bells.

God laughs, watching me stuck in the slow lane to piety, and orders Repent. I grin a hundred times.

Jesus and Father Michael hold hands, kneeling on flint.
Mealtimes, I chew glass shards.

Night 55 Someone turns a key, the lock clicks and a brief sound of rain sneaks in through the opening.
It feels like a sharp scratch.

Day 63 I clench my fists on the table hiding two buttons ripped from mother's dress last time I saw her. You'd say they look like half-cracked walnuts before Father picks up a hammer to split them open.

Objects

How they burn and drop.
The fork falls
just out of reach;
the dryer bursts on fire,
sets off the smoke alarm.
How they resist
their square holes.
The anchor
rips through the deck, the mast
fails.

If You See A Bee

My mother said: "Why do you always tell the truth?"

And: "You're like all the childless women I have ever known."

"Close your mouth if you see a bee. It might fly in."

Wes Lee

in her breath,
a trace of onion . . .
mom tries to revise my controversial
memories

Anna Cates

Funeral

First time 'home' in over twenty years

I find myself
Standing
Staring for hours
Into pouring backyard rain

I realize I am the perfect portrait; Same height
 Same weight
 Same age
 Same goddamn doleful stare

I am the perfect portrait of my own abusive father And no funeral can ever bury him

Ken Troklus

blood tests my daughter becoming a ghost

Rich Schilling

Griping at my girl's books on the floor my stoop my father's and his his mother's and hers her mother's

Andy Fogle

on good days I see only beautiful things

a man splitting a pastry with his daughter ripping it in half and she rocks her body from side to side in anticipation of the bigger half

which she gets

A failure to experience my life as something other than a transatlantic flight of absurd proportions during which I avail myself of various distractions; convenient and indefensible feeding, snacks, hot drinks, alcohol, pills, movies, and trips to the toilet, all the while struggling to get comfortable as others do the work necessary to ensure that we arrive at our destination.

Nothing to say,
but that doesn't stop me.

Cralan Kelder

digging through the fat on either margin

Jacob Kobina Ayiah Mensah category tombs of a lost cause barefoot boy

the search for cardboard almost dry

moonlit redactions of a frond dance

Bill Cooper

Graveyard Shadow

sediment of silence

a polonaise
of sunlight
pierces the gauze
of rain

a dim whirring
of shadow
the wingbeat
of a moth's meditation
on time

William Cirocco

Time I read a few poems looking out over
the hills
before the mosquitoes
come

Sitting here not noticing
it's raining until it stops

John Phillips

Edited by Philip Rowland

Cover photograph by John Levy

Published by Noon Press, Tokyo noonpoetry.com

ISSN 2188-2967